

SECTION –A (READING

1. Read the following comprehension and answer the questions given below

Many doctor's children are pushed into becoming doctors. Physicians often want their children to become doctors because they have an established practice that they can hand over to them. They also feel they can provide useful career guidance, and their contacts will help give children a flying start in the medical profession. However, many of these children often end up as unhappy misfits, disappointing themselves and their parents as well and making a mess of their lives. Others are propelled into medicine because they find the work their father does fascinating and would love to follow in his foot steps. Many children are profoundly influenced by their father's love of medicine and his empathy for patients. The important thing is to let your children make up their own minds.
